Editorial

This being our first issue, we feel it is necessary to devote this editorial to state our objectives and to try to clear up, what we feel to be, misconceptions regarding policies of this publication.

To begin with, the format of the Carbon will remain essentially the same. The Carbon is an informal publication, and will remain so under our editorship. It is not our intention to strive toward a professional format in search of meaningful (?) awards, but rather our goal will be to stimulate interest and to promote the exchange of ideas throughout the Marian Community.

There seems to be a widespread misconception of the meaning of an editorial. Essentially, an editorial is merely the opinion of the editor. Therefore, it is necessary to take a side. We will continue to speak out for or against important policies or issues that might arise. However, we would like to point out that, when taking issue to a particular policy, it will not be our intention to attack any individuals, but rather, the policy he or she is promoting.

Contrary to popular belief, the Carbon has been and will continue to be receptive to all responses from any concerned individual in the Marian Community. Without an adequate response from others, not directly involved with the publication, it is impossible to obtain a wide variety of opinions. Therefore, we encourage all people, both students and faculty, to submit any material they feel will be of interest to the Marian College Community. Anyone wishing to submit letters can drop them off at the Carbon Office, the Perc box or to either of the editors.

Dave Stark and Rich Vanes

Note: Because of the poor response to the Carbon survey we will be accepting surveys till Wednesday, April 18th. Keep those surveys coming, folks!

From the Masses:

To the Carbon and the College,

I wish to take exception to the parody-verse penned by the editors of the Carbon in the last issue; specifically the stanza that maligned the intelligence of the Bootstrap-student at Marian. It is simply false that as a group they are inferior intellectually to the general run of students at Marian. What is true is that they are discernably much harder working. There is a real issue at stake in the matter of the Bootstrap program and the FAA program, but unfortunately the editors did not raise it. To wit: How will such programs affect the character of the college as a four year undergraduate liberal arts institution? I happen to support both programs, (and as a member of the Adult Education Committee participated in the work that saw each established) but I recognize the legitimate worries that such programs give rise to in the minds of some faculty and students, especially the FAA program. The Carbon might have raised the issue which, I think, was really the editors concern anyway. Finally, I think it regrettable that first, the present editors stint, which is both courageous and accurate in many respects ended in the note that it did and second, that so many in the Marian Community who differed with the editorial view of the Carbon neglected their responsibility to use the letters to the editors designated to make their objections public. This should have raised the level of dialogue thus benefiting to that of reasoned discourse.

History Dept.

To the Editors:

I will restrict myself to only one aspect of the verse appearing in the Apr. 6 issue of the Carbon. Instead of being brainless (as the verse indicates), the Marian College students on the Operation Bootstrap program have made a splendid contribution to the intellectual life of this school. I have taught five of these students and have heard excellent reports on several others. While sharing a variety of ideas with their fellow students and teachers, they are quite willing to benefit from the ideas of their fellow students and teachers.

I am embarrassed that two Marian students should cast such an unsupported slur on other Marian students. I assume that the grand majority of the college community shares my embarrassment and hopes for a larger number of students on the Bootstrap program next year.

Sincerely,
James E. Goebel
English Dept.

To the M.C. community:

Concerning the Editorial verse about the G.I.'s, in last weeks Carbon, we are sorry that it seems several men on the Bootstrap Program took it so personally. For that reason we apologize to them, for the statement, "but have no brains to show" was clearly false.

It should be evident that the parody was a satire and not meant to be taken seriously as evidenced by the following line "Seriously though . . ." (We hope no one believed we were really thankful for Dr. Gatto's note or for calls into Dean Brames' office). Sarcasm and satire can't be banned just because some people are offended. (Often they deserve to be offended, though not in this case). However in the present situation some have questioned whether it was satire or libel. Last night a representative of the men on the Bootstrap program threatened personal suit and the elimination of the Carbon. On this short notice we were unable to consult a lawyer. If it was libel we would retract it, though this is still open to question. The verse was a generalization and not directed against any person. In any case, something that was not meant to be taken seriously, should not have such a serious effect.

To the M.C. community:

In last week's Carbon, Dr. Adams brought to our attention a possible disparity in the number of class days between the fall and spring semester of the upcoming academic year. According to his calculations, the proposed length of the spring semester would exceed that of the fall semester by five class periods.

While I agree wholeheartedly with his concluding puzzlement as to how some local people arrive at these and other decisions (I have been befuddled more than once in the recent past at the rationale behind several decisions made at Marian), I would like to suggest a different perspective on his argumentation of this issue, a perspective which I fail to discern in Dr. Adams's remarks.

My own personal reaction to the possible disparity in question is of what Dr. Adams calls the "who cares?" variety. But it is a "who cares?" based on the conviction that a course is something more than a series of discrete sitting sessions. Dr. Adams asks, "How can Marian College offer two semesters of unequal length and give equal credit to both?" This question rests on the assumption that unequal length implies a significant difference in the content of a course. But surely any given course is (or ought to be) controlled by a qualitative unity of content as well as a quantitative number of meetings. If so, then it is conceivable that a quality course could be offered in a single hour session (I cite as an instance the excellent "course" on the nature of holiness presented in Plato's Euthyphro). This kind of qualitative unity is conceivable, but clearly it is impractical. Yet it should be pointed out that it is impractical only on the unquestioned "bookkeeping" standards of contemporary educational organization (numbers of courses, credit hours, majors, minors, etc.). The danger here is that the importance placed on the numerical will submerge the equal (and, in the artless simplicity of my own mind, more important) feature of the unity of a course. Speaking for myself, I would not care a pin if I had to teach the same course in consecutive semesters when there was a disparity of five class meetings (or more) between the first and second semesters. The only problem would be to arrange the rhythm of topics covered so that in each semester some sort of unified course was achieved. If this approach is sound, then it is not really relevant to ask how the college can give credit for the same course if its length is unequal. The answer is that it is the same course, but that the unity of the shorter is different than the unity of the longer. Now perhaps Dr. Adams does not disagree with this argument, but my impression was that the qualitative perspective was not in the content of his letter. And, as I mentioned, it seems a relevant feature of the issue.

To the Marian College Freshmen:

In answer to last week's article on the office of Freshman Class President being taken away from Ed Krusa by the administration, I as a fellow student and class officer wish to inform the Freshmen Class that Ed Krusa, not the administration, took himself out of office.

It has always been my belief that a class president should live up to his responsibilities of his office and not spend time playing pranks. Ask Ed why he's on social probation. Ask Ed why he has yet to inform some of the officers of his reason for no longer being president.

Now, I ask you, who took the office away from whom?

Lucy Pritz
Frosh Vice-President

To the Carbon:

Several weeks ago I started a name the baby contest in the Carbon. I was shocked and appalled by the response I received. People suggested names like Dry Martini, Tina Marie Martini and other such truck which I cannot mention in this letter. In desperation I entered the name Daniel, declared myself the winner, and awarded myself the prize.

Sincerely,
Dave Martini

P.S. Danny is being baptized Holy Saturday and all are invited.

"CANTERBURY TALES"

A Naughty band of pilgrims, clearly in need of a remission of their sins, will march, ride and roister their way through the musical called "Canterbury Tales" at the Marian College Theatre for three performances May 4, 5, 6th.

The musical, which won fanfares of praise when it was first presented in 1968 and then in New York in 1969, is a modern rock 'n' roll song-and-dance show derived from Geoffrey Chaucer's 14th century collection of tales that a rowdy group of travellers told one another on a pilgrimage from London to Canterbury Cathedral, to be absolved of their sins by visiting the tomb of St. Thomas a Becket. Judging by the spicy stories they tell one another at a stopping place on their journey, they have a good share of sins to account for.

"Canterbury Tales" has been a classic of rich language and rich bawdiness since Chaucer wrote his 23 stories in rhymed couplets in 1385. Four of them are incorporated in this new musical that is embellished with 24 songs and a great deal of skylarking and high-spirited dancing.

Under the direction of Professor Don Johnson, a cast of thirty will sound out the effervescent gaiety of the show, with the major roles in the hands of Marty Risch, Dan Kernan, Greg Rodick, Alan Roell, Carlos Barbera, Patty Kane and Margie Freeland.

INTRAMURAL SOFTBALL

This week saw many of the league's top teams losing ballgames; when the smoke had cleared, MFIC remained the only undefeated team. The defending champs have already clinched first place. However, it is my opinion that their dirty ballplayers will not get past the first round of the playoffs.

The other three playoff positions are still up for grabs with five teams having a good shot at them. Master Batters, Pit Shit, Over the Fence Gang, and the Moppet Men all have two losses with Sarge's Raiders right behind with three. Da Profs still are looking for their first win, while the Softballs, highly touted at the start of the season, chose to forfeit their games last week while coach Eddie Sherman was vacationing in Florida.

In what had to be one of the most exciting plays of the week, Speedster Chuck Hein nearly beat out a ground ball to centerfield but was thrown out by rifle arm Tim Ellinger in a game that pitted the Mind Friars against the Moppet Men. It is rumored, by the way, that the Moppet Men, in their desperate search for a left-handed pitcher have put Mark "Scrud" Fischer on the trading block.

YESTERDAY'S HEALTH

Greetings health fans!

Have you been obsessed lately with the wild fear of pecuniary inadequacy? Have you felt undue palpitations of the heart and eyeballs at the sound of a penny dropping on the sidewalk? Poor Devil! Obviously, you're suffering from monetary monomaniacy, or fear of losing money. To alleviate this, we prescribe the following:

- 1) Burn all checks, money orders, and make your parents cut off all funds.
- 2) Become a beef salesman. That way you can rid yourself of all of that nasty soul imprisoning cash.
- 3) Take a trip to Honolulu.
- 4) Raise our salary, so we can stay on at Marvin U.
- 5) To relieve your overstrained purse-strings, of the root of all evil and benefit your fellow man simultaneously you can patronize your local care-a-thon with your mad money.

So until next week, enjoy Easter and go easy on confections, provided by that seasonal rodent.

SHORTS

MIXED VOLLEYBALL

Mixed Volleyball is well underway with two undefeated teams still in action. The league is divided into two divisions with ten teams in each league.

On Monday night, Subject to Change continued its winning streak by defeating Ba-Mo-Fu. The Hard Luck Gimps coming off of several broken bones this year bounced the Net Result while the Moppet Squad handled all that the Ballers served. The Net Profits were given the night off as Pudge continued to not show up. Finishing the night, Ebony had little trouble with Play on Time.

In the B division, Meep Meep and the Road Runners whopped Hamm's Six Pack, while Better than Nothing finally won a game over the Six Pack. This team has yet to live up to it's pre-seasoned expectations--stick to baseball, "buddy". The Good, the Bad, and Hobbit easily defeated the Jocks and Jockettes. The Faculty remained undefeated as they trounced the Spikers. In the final game of the night, the Jolly, Volley Ballers made quick work of the winless Utopians.

Wednesday night action saw Mark Mauer's Net Profits defeat Ebony for the surprise of the evening. Subject remained undefeated as they easily handled the Ballers. The Net Result rebounded from Monday Night's loss from Pudge's forfeit. Jerry Leugers lead the Gimps over the Moppet squad while Ba-Mo-Fu smoked Play On Time.

In the "B" division, the faculty had little trouble with the Jolley Volley Ballers, while Meep Meep and the Road Runners continued a winning streak with a victory over the Six Pak. The Good, the Bad, and the Hobbit killed the winless Utopians. Becky Korhman's Jocks and the Jockettes finally pulled out a victory over Hamm's Six Pak while the Spikers easily handled Better than Nothing.

For the Badminton fans, unfortunately, you'll have to wait until after Easter to find out the victor of the hotly contested crown. We pick the freshman combination of Jill Wagner and Joan Mills to win it all.
